

Morocco knows that I am not afraid.

I cannot be bought.

They cannot bribe me.

I am a defender who will continue resisting for the rights of my people and that of all women.

–Sultana Khaya

Sultana Khaya is a human rights defender of Western Sahara, the last remaining colony in Africa. Spain remains the administrative power in Western Sahara while Morocco imposes a brutal military occupation that is supported by the US government.

The Moroccan forces commit sexual assault against women and men, destroy homes and deprive basic human rights, causing physical and psychological trauma to the Saharawi people.

Sultana Khaya, a committed nonviolent activist, is a prominent leader in her community of indigenous women resisting these atrocities as well as the plunder of her homeland's natural resources, including phosphates, iron ore, oil and fisheries.

SULTANA KHAYA -
SAHARAWI HUMAN RIGHTS DEFENDER

Oil paint, Ann Young ©2022

For more information please go to Karama Sahara website:
karamasahara.org

T286CW

Postcard
Postage

Syracuse Cultural Workers 800.949.5139

T286

Printed by union labor in USA
on 30% postconsumer waste (PCW) recycled stock. 10/22